

Order of Seizure:

An order of seizure is used to seize specified items of personal property whose ownership and possession is disputed. A final judgment will usually direct the disposition of the property to a specified party,

Both of the above referenced processes are "provisional remedies" which means that although they are court orders, they are pre final judgment. Any property seized is taken into the Sheriff's custody and held by him until the disposition is ordered by the court.